

A photograph showing the aftermath of a typhoon. The ground is covered in a vast field of debris, including wooden planks, metal sheets, and other household items. In the foreground, a young boy in a striped tank top and red pants stands on a pile of debris, looking towards the right. In the background, several people are visible, some sitting on the ground and others standing. To the right, there are makeshift structures made of wood and metal sheets, some of which appear to be partially destroyed. The sky is overcast with grey clouds. The overall scene conveys a sense of devastation and the impact of natural disasters on communities.
